THE operatic productions by amateurs, some of whom are distinguished already, and most of whom will be at the end of the week, the dances, the chief of which will be the cotillon tomorrow night at Bauscher's, with Representative and Mrs. Wadsworth as hosts; a number of formal dinners and luncheons, musicales and evening receptions and the weddings inaugurated in rather a brilliant way the spring season, which promises quite as lengthy a program as last year, when Congress and official society generally had a big part in what was doing. Only a small section of the congressional world and hotel representation in society is still here, so that nearly everything on the cards comes from some form of local activity.

The embassies which have contributed most to the enjoyment of the past season have been the German, Japanese and Mexican, the latter, however, seemingly having only just commenced its hospitable sway and intending to make the spring quite as delightful in this regard as has been the last few weeks at the home of our sister republic. The evening receptions both at the home of Baron von Sternburg and the Viscount Aoki kept up all the social traditions with which each of the social circles is associated, while the pleasure which the ambassador of Mexico and Mme. Creel are showing in their residence here is in daily evidence. Both formally and informally they are frequent hosts, and will take an important part in the Easter gaieties, having among other functions a dinner on Tuesday night and a reception for next Saturday night. The Mexican, who is now spick and span within and will be very soon so also without, as the stone on the front is being cleaned down, making quite a transformation in the looks of the building. The ambassador expects to stay here until late and go to some resort not distant from the hot weather, while Mme. Creel will go back to Mexico for the summer.

The diplomatic corps has been invited to the opening exercises of the Jamestown exposition, and other plans will be held in abeyance until after the acceptance of this formal courtesy. The early departures will include the German ambassador and Baron von Sternburg. The dean of the corps, Baron des Planches, has not entertained to any marked degree the past season, as the baroness remained abroad. The ambassador will go abroad later, but not till after he takes a long western trip which he is now contemplating.

The Austrian ambassador expects to join his wife in Europe during the summer. The French ambassador and Mme. Jusseland, whose mourning retirement has not been broken by any social participation in social life, are likely to go abroad also, the counselor of embassy, M. des Portes, being expected to return in several months. The Brazilian ambassador and Mme. Nabuco are still in mourning. The Russian ambassador and Baroness Rosen have been given a spring series of charming dinners through the winter. Count and Countess Hatzfeldt, who have spent several months with the parents of the latter, the Japanese ambassador and Viscountess Aoki, are going back to Germany in May.

The British ambassador and Mrs. Bryce are during their recent stay in New York an opportunity to see what American hospitality means, although neither are strangers to the life by virtue of other visits to this country. They will be back here, and meanwhile the improvements in the embassy are nearing completion. A number of entertainments, dinners mostly, will be given for the ambassador and his wife before society scatters for the summer.

Gen. Morteza Khan, the Persian minister, was the recipient of many congratulatory visits on the morning of March 22, which is the first day of the new year in the Persian calendar. His house on 16th street was decorated with roses principally, although other flowers were in evidence. These present came because they knew of the recurrence of the festival and of the customs pertaining to its celebration. The minister received in his den up stairs, a most interesting room, by the way, where real Persian ideas in decoration obtain, with the splendid rugs and ornaments owned by the host used in working them out. This room, which has a sunny outlook, is a favorite spot with the minister, where he always receives his intimate friends, and where he brews most delicious tea for them and offers the sweets, nuts and other delicacies of his country. After spending an hour or so in a pleasant interchange of compliments, the host led the way down stairs to the parlor, where a Persian feast was spread on the floor, to partake of which the guests had to seat themselves on the floor, too. The minister has on his floors some of the finest rugs in this city. A stretch of squares of embroidered linens made the table cloth and on this, between the flowers and the dishes of substantial and sweets, were a number of candlesticks with tapers burning in them, each tied with a different colored ribbon bow. Altogether the entertainment was an unusual one. A similar celebration would have marked the date last year, but the illness of the Shah of Persia at that time prevented.
